

Adalis Packaging Solutions on the Move

The Adalis Packaging Solutions team has moved to a new location on H.B. Fuller Corporate Campus.

Vancouver, Wash. – March 11, 2010 – Adalis Corporation, a global packaging solutions company, announced today that the Adalis Packaging Solutions group has moved from its Minneapolis, MN location to an expanded facility within the H.B. Fuller Corporate Campus located in St. Paul, MN.

The Adalis Packaging Solutions team is a group of certified packaging engineers that provide expert and unbiased packaging engineering services to companies around the world. Their goal is to help clients improve profitability and sustainability through better packaging performance and design as well as through supply chain optimization. Adalis has helped clients save millions of dollars in packaging and supply chain costs.

The new location offers the team a larger space and features a brand new Packaging Development Center (PDC) that includes equipment, tools and technology for packaging design and development and rapid packaging prototyping. Custom package testing, especially for the retail and beverage industries, can be done onsite.

Tom Blanck, manager, says, “We are excited about our new facility; it enhances our ability to better serve our clients. The Packaging Development Center is an innovative laboratory where clients can visit and have a hands-on experience as we work on new packaging designs and prototypes.”

The new office is located on the H.B. Fuller Corporate Campus (Adalis is subsidiary of H.B. Fuller Company) offering close access to all of the resources of the corporate campus. “There is a strong momentum and energy within the H.B. Fuller corporate campus and we are eager to collaborate with our colleagues to contribute to the positively charged atmosphere,” states Blanck.
